Transitions is a drug and alcohol addiction treatment program for women and their children that offers up to 6 months of residential treatment and 6 months of continuing care. Opened in 1996, this family-focused program is the only long-term facility for recovering women and children in northeast Indiana. Transitions is certified by the Indiana Division of Mental Health as an "Addictions Service Provider." The program teaches women recovery skills, parenting skills, life management techniques, knowledge of child development and more so that these families are not only healthier but also more capable of becoming self-sustaining household units in the community. Nearly 95% of Transitions clients are single parents with limited family support. More than 50% of them meet the criteria for homelessness at admission; many Transitions clients do not have a safe environment in which to reside upon discharge from the program. The children who are admitted with their mothers are preschool age, 5 and under. The majority of children have experienced multiple primary care givers either by other family members or in foster care placements. The vast majority of children are CHINS ("children in need of services" as a result of parental neglect or abuse). For children who have been raised in an addictive environment, program services that impart structure, routines and healthy role-modeling of appropriate situational behaviors are crucial. Transitions strives to provide that structure for the children while helping their mothers maintain a life of recovery from drug and alcohol addiction. In 2011, 58 women and 41 children were served at Transitions.

Community Outreach is a growing component of REACT. Funding from VOCA and INCASA is allowing a part-time position to increase to full-time with a special focus on establishing an Engaging Men Task Force and Coaching Boys to Men, two educational efforts to involve men, coaches, and athletes in the fight to end violence against women through mentoring boys and modeling behavior.
